Sinead O’Conner

In 1992, Sinéad O'Connor appeared on Saturday Night Live where she performed an a cappella version of Bob Marley's song "War." At the end of her performance, she presented a photo of Pope John Paul II to the camera and then tore it up, stating "fight the real enemy." This act was a protest against the abuse in the Catholic Church. The incident sparked a significant amount of controversy and had a lasting impact on O'Connor's career and public image. It's important to note that discussions about such events should be approached with sensitivity and awareness of the various perspectives involved.
